Zerstörung deutschen Privateigentums in Paris

AN EFFECT OF THE WAR-FEVER IN PARIS: GERMAN AND AUSTRIAN COMMERCIAL PREMISES AND AN HOTEL WRECKED BY MOBS.

An unfortunate, but in the circumstances not unnatural, effect of the war-fever in Paris in the early days of the struggle was the wrecking by the crowd of premises under, or thought to be under, German or Austrian proprietorship. Of our photographs, No. 1 shows premises belonging to Messrs. Appert and with the windows smashed; No. 2 a dairy known as the Laiterie Maget; No. 3 the Hotel feminas in front of the Gare de l'Est; No. 4 a brewery, or beer-house. Many shop-keepers in Paris, it has been reported, have found it advisable to notify their customers that they only sell French-made goods. A number of shops have had to close altogether, partly owing to panic buying-in of stores by the public, and partly through their staffs being called to military service.—(Photographs by Nadeau.)

Gerhörte deutsche und österreichische Geschäfte in Paris. Döferricht und Stillfation, deren Begriffe für unfre Gegner Schlagworte geworden sind, hielten die Bevölkerung von Paris, London und Mailand nicht ab, sich in zügelloser Weise an dem nach dem Döferricht geschückten Eigentum mehrlofer Privatpersonen zu vergreifen.
